

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
DISTRICT OF NEVADA

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Plaintiff,

v.

JASON DAVID GARRETT,

Defendant.

Case No. 2:15-cr-31-KJD-NJK

ORDER

Presently before the Court is Movant's Motion to Vacate, Set Aside, or Correct Sentence under 28 U.S.C. § 2255 (#31). The Government responded in opposition (#33) to which Movant replied (#34). The Government also filed a Motion for Leave to Advise the Court of New Supreme Court Authority (#44). Movant responded (#45) to which the Government replied (#47).

I. Factual and Procedural Background

Movant Jason Garrett ("Garrett" or "Defendant") was convicted, on his guilty plea, of unlawful possession of a firearm by a previously convicted felon. He now requests that the Court vacate his sentence under 28 U.S.C. § 2255, asserting that his indictment and subsequent conviction are invalid.

Garrett has a lengthy criminal history, dating back to 1996 at age 18. Over the next 20 years, Garrett was convicted of various offenses including battery, giving false information to a police officer, drug possession, DUIs, and possessing drugs with intent to distribute. (PSR). On his first felony drug conviction, in 2008, the state court sentenced him to 12-34 months in state prison and he spent more than a year in prison for that offense. Id. In 2010, Garrett was again sentenced to 12-34 months in prison for a second drug-trafficking felony. Id. He was paroled early after serving nearly one year in prison. Id.

1 In May 2015, Garrett pleaded guilty according to a plea agreement with the government, to 2 unlawful possession of a firearm by a previously convicted felon. (#20). In the plea agreement, 3 Garrett admitted that he knowingly possessed the firearm, and that when he did, he had been 4 previously convicted of a crime punishable by a term of imprisonment exceeding one year. (#21, 5 at 4).

6 In September 2015, this Court sentenced Garrett to 80 months of imprisonment followed by 7 three years of supervised release. (#26/27). Garrett did not appeal, and his conviction became 8 final on September 25, 2015.

9 On May 11, Garrett filed this motion to vacate, arguing that the indictment was defective
 10 because it “did not allege Mr. Garrett knew he had a prohibitive status at the time of possession,” 11 and that “the defective indictment also stripped the Court of jurisdiction.” (#31, at 9). Garrett 12 further alleges that the “defect” in his indictment violated his Fifth and Sixth Amendment rights.
 13 Id.

14 II. Legal Standard

15 A. Section 2255

16 28 U.S.C. § 2255 allows a federal prisoner to seek relief under four grounds: (1) “the 17 sentence was imposed in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States;” (2) “the 18 court was without jurisdiction to impose such a sentence;” (3) “the sentence was in excess of the 19 maximum authorized by law;” and (4) the sentence is “otherwise subject to collateral attack.” 28
 20 U.S.C. § 2255(a).

21 Under 18 U.S.C. § 922(g), it is “unlawful for any person” who falls within one of nine 22 enumerated categories to “possess in or affecting commerce any firearm or ammunition.”
 23 Section 924(a)(2) sets out the penalties applicable to “[w]henever knowingly violates” § 922(g).
 24 Before June 2019, courts treated the knowledge requirement in § 924(a)(2) as applying only to 25 the defendant’s possession of a firearm or ammunition, not to the fact that he fell within the 26 relevant enumerated category. But on June 21, 2019, the Supreme Court issued its decision in 27 Rehaif v. United States, 139 S.Ct. 2191 (2019), holding that a defendant’s knowledge “that he 28 fell within the relevant status (that he was a felon, an alien unlawfully in this country, or the like)” is an element of a § 922(g) offense. Id. at 2194. This decision applies to all § 922(g) categories, including felons under § 922(g)(1). A felon is one who has been convicted of a crime punishable by more than one year of imprisonment.

In Rehaif, the Supreme Court stated:

The question here concerns the scope of the word “knowingly.” Does it mean that the Government must prove that a defendant knew both that he engaged in the relevant conduct (that he possessed a firearm) and also that he fell within the relevant status (that he was a felon, an alien unlawfully in this country, or the like)? We hold that the word “knowingly” applies both to the defendant’s conduct and to the defendant’s status. To convict a defendant, the Government therefore must show that the defendant knew he possessed a firearm and also that he knew he had the relevant status when he possessed it.

Id. Rehaif does not stand for the proposition that the government must prove the defendant knew his possession of the firearm was unlawful. Rehaif requires proof of the defendant’s felonious status. So, in a prosecution under 18 U.S.C. § 922(g) and § 924(a)(2), the government must prove that (1) the defendant knew he possessed a firearm and that (2) he knew he belonged to the relevant category of persons barred from possessing a firearm. See id. at 2200. To hold otherwise would mean that pure ignorance of the United States Code was a sufficient defense.

The Supreme Court also recently held that “[i]n felon-in-possession cases, a Rehaif error is not a basis for plain-error relief unless the defendant first makes a sufficient argument or representation on appeal that he would have presented evidence at trial that he did not in fact know he was a felon.” Greer v. United States, 141 S.Ct. 2090, 2093 (2021). The Court held that for the felons-in-possession in that case, they must have shown that had the Rehaif errors been correctly advised, there was a “reasonable possibility” they would have been acquitted or not have plead guilty. Id. The Court held that it was unlikely they would have carried that burden because both had been convicted of multiple felonies before and those “prior convictions are substantial evidence that they knew they were felons.” Id. The Court also rejected the argument that a Rehaif error is a structural one that requires automatic vacatur and held that “Rehaif errors fit comfortably within the ‘general rule’ that ‘a constitutional error does not automatically require reversal of a conviction.’” Id., quoting Arizona v. Fulminante, 499 U.S. 279, 306 (1991).

1           III.     Analysis

2           Garrett asserts that in light of Rehaif, his sentence is unconstitutional and must be remanded
3 because (1) the indictment failed to allege a cognizable crime against the United States and 4 therefore stripped the Court of jurisdiction; (2) the grand jury was not required to find probable
5 cause as per the defective indictment which violated his Fifth Amendment rights; and (3) Garrett
6 was not informed of the nature and cause of the accusation which violated his Sixth Amendment 7 rights. (#31, at 13-14).

8           The government argues that the (1) Court did have jurisdiction; (2) that any error there may 9 have been in the indictment to match the Rehaif ruling does not constitute plain error affecting 10 Garrett’s substantial rights, and (3) that Rehaif does not stand for the proposition that the 11 government has to prove that Garrett knew his felony convictions barred him from possessing 12 firearms, and instead that Rehaif requires the government to prove he knew he had a felonious 13 status at the time he possessed the gun.

14           A. Jurisdiction

15           Garrett argues that his indictment failed to describe the criminal conduct as per Rehaif, which 16 constitutes a fatal defect and deprived the Court of jurisdiction. (#31, at 14). However, the Ninth 17 Circuit has ruled on this identical argument, holding that “the indictment’s omission of the 18 knowledge of status requirement did not deprive the district court of jurisdiction.” United States 19 v. Espinoza, 816 Fed.Appx. 82, 84 (9th Cir. 2020). “The Supreme Court has explicitly rejected
20 ‘the view that indictment omissions deprive a court of jurisdiction...’ and this holding applies
21 where ‘an indictment fails to allege the specific intent required’ for a crime[.]” Id., quoting
22 United States v. Cotton, 535 U.S. 625, 631 (2002), United States v. Velasco-Medina, 205 F.3d
23 839, 845-46 (9th Cir. 2002). Therefore, the Court rejects Garrett’s argument that his Court lacked 24 jurisdiction.

25           B. Fifth Amendment Rights

26           Garrett also argues that because of the insufficient indictment, his Fifth Amendment rights 27 were violated, and his sentence should be vacated. (#31, at 16). “The Fifth Amendment’s grand 28 jury requirement establishes the ‘substantial right to be tried only on charges presented in an

1 indictment returned by a grand jury.” United States v. Davis, 854 F.3d 601, 603 (9th Cir. 2017), 2 quoting United States v. Antonakeas, 255 F.3d 714, 721 (9th Cir. 2001). Garrett asserts that the 3 failure to include the Rehaif elements “impermissibly allow[ed] conviction on a charge never 4 considered by the grand jury” and that he should not have been tried based off this faulty
 5 indictment. (#31, at 16, 18). He also argues that this was a structural error that does not require a 6 showing of prejudice. Id. at 18.

7 “In this circuit an indictment missing an essential element that is properly challenged before 8 trial must be dismissed.” United States v. Qazi, 975 F.3d 989, 991 (9th Cir. 2020). Garrett has 9 not presented any evidence that he properly challenged his indictment before trial.

10 Further, the Supreme Court has held that a Rehaif error is not a structural one, so Garrett 11 must show actual prejudice. In Greer, the Court explained that “[s]tructural errors are errors that 12 affect the ‘entire conduct of the [proceeding] from beginning to end’ and consist of things like 13 ‘the denial of counsel of choice, denial of self-representation, denial of a public trial, and failure 14 to convey to a jury that guilt must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.’” Greer, 141 S.Ct., at 15 2100. There, the Court held that “the omission of a single element from jury instructions or the 16 omission of a required warning from a Rule 11 plea colloquy— are not structural because they do 17 not ‘necessarily render a criminal trial fundamentally unfair or an unreliable vehicle for 18 determining guilt or innocence.” Id., quoting Neder v. United States, 527 U.S. 1, 9 (1999). The 19 Court finds that here, the omission of the Rehaif requirement in the indictment does not amount 20 to a structural error because it did not render Garrett’s legal proceedings fundamentally unfair or 21 an unreliable vehicle for him deciding to plead guilty. As noted in Greer, “[i]f a person is a felon, 22 he ordinarily knows he is a felon.” Greer, 141 S.Ct., at 2097. “Felony status is simply not the 23 kind of thing that one forgets.” Id., quoting United States v. Gary, 963 F.3d 420, 423 (4th Cir.
 24 2020). Garrett has not made an argument that he did not know he was a felon, nor has he made a 25 sufficient argument that the indictment truly did infect the entire judicial proceeding such that he 26 would have changed his guilty plea.

27 C. Sixth Amendment Rights

28 Garrett makes a similar argument regarding his Sixth Amendment rights— that the indictment

1 did not give him reasonable certainty the nature of the accusation against him and that it
2 inhibited his counsel's ability to properly defend him. (#31, at 19-20). The Court does not find 3 this convincing. Again, Garrett has not made any representations that he did not know of his 4 felonious status at the time he possessed the gun, and he has not shown in any way that it 5 affected his guilty plea.

6 Garrett also asserts this was a structural error that entitles him to relief without showing 7 prejudice. Id. at 21. However, as clarified in Greer and explained above, this was not a structural 8 error. Garrett stipulated in his guilty plea that he had a handgun in his possession and that at the 9 time of his possession he had been convicted of one or more criminal offenses punishable by 10 imprisonment for over one year. (#21, at 4). Further, the Supreme Court reasoned that when a 11 defendant considers pleading guilty for this charge, he will usually recognize that as a felon, a 12 jury would find he knew he was a felon when he possessed the gun and would likely factor that 13 in when making the decision. Greer, 141 S.Ct., at 2097. "In short, if a defendant was in fact a 14 felon, it will be difficult for him to carry the burden on plain-error review of showing a 15 'reasonable probability' that, but for the Rehaif error, the outcome of the district court
16 proceedings would have been different." Id. Garrett has not made a showing that his Sixth 17 Amendment rights were violated because of the Rehaif error and as per Greer, his sentence will 18 not be vacated.

19 IV. Conclusion

20 Accordingly, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that Movant's Motion to Vacate, Set Aside, or 21 Correct Sentence under 28 U.S.C. § 2255 (#31) is DENIED.
